

As someone with a journalism degree, I have been alarmed at big media's blatant disregard for the fairness doctrine and equal time provisions of their licensee obligations. The very limited public airwaves are being used by Sinclair pretty much free of charge. Our regulators need to hold them to their obligation to present balanced political coverage. If they air content which disregards these principles in order to give one presidential candidate an advantage over the other - in other words, if they air one kind of documentary and not another - that should be grounds for relieving the station of its license. I will be interested to see if the FCC takes this issue seriously.
